

Mark Maloney
Chief Economic Development Officer, City of Boston
Director, Boston Redevelopment Authority

Mark Maloney was appointed Chief Economic Development Officer for the City of Boston by Mayor Thomas M. Menino in January 2000. Mr. Maloney serves on the Mayor's cabinet and is the Director of the Boston Redevelopment Authority (BRA) – Boston's planning and economic development agency – and the Economic Development and Industrial Corporation of Boston (EDIC) and its Office of Jobs and Community Services (JCS).

During his tenure, Mr. Maloney has managed substantial growth in Boston. Millions of square feet of office space have been added to Boston's market in prime downtown locations as well as neighborhood centers like Allston, Charlestown, Roxbury, and the South Boston Waterfront. The city has witnessed the construction of thousands of new hotel rooms as the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center project approaches completion. Boston's institutions have grown considerably with new academic campuses under construction at Boston University and Northeastern University as well as new research and clinical space in the Longwood Medical Area and proposed along the Crosstown Corridor. Mr. Maloney is one of the primary architects of Mayor Menino's Leading the Way housing strategy under which the BRA, working closely with the City's Department of Neighborhood Development and the Boston Housing Authority, has assisted the construction of more than seven thousand five hundred new units of market-rate and affordable housing. He has supported the arts in Boston with the development of artist live-work and exhibition space as well as new performance space at the Boston Center for the Arts/Atelier 505 complex and the preservation of theater space at the Paramount Theater, Opera House and the Modern Theater. Mr. Maloney has been the point person for Mayor Menino on the Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project and the Rose Kennedy Greenway.

Mr. Maloney has been closely involved in housing and real estate for over twenty-six years while working in the private, public, and nonprofit arenas. Prior to his appointment as Chief Economic Development Officer, Mr. Maloney was a Partner of Maloney Properties, Inc., a full service real estate management and marketing company. He founded Maloney Properties in 1981, and served as President and CEO throughout his tenure.

Maloney is a graduate of the College of the Holy Cross. He, his wife Georgia Murray, and their two children live in Boston.
